They were off at a hand gallop forthwith, brougham, driver and the fair passenger inside whirling past Mr. and Mrs. Stencill, gaping on the pavement. Guy stood, an inhuman scarecrow, in all his outrageous circumstance, fair in the middle of the street, and continued his profanity, gesturing the moon. He had dropped his h s with his waist and corsage, and his talk was the talk of a bargee the next morning of a mad Bank Holiday. Mortimer Stencill drew his wife away, though there was not a word audible that a lady should understand, and left the victim to his apostrophe. But at the next turning the indecent nightmare shot by them, sprinting like a demon, a marvel of preposterous di shabilld, an outrage to sound and sight, dripping lingerie and buttons, as he galloped to the top of the street and collided with a policeman at the turning. As the couple went out of sight, officer and maniac were locked in each other s arms, and a shrill whistle was being echoed from several directions at once. The actor and his spouse were by this time too weak to talk, and they went home, borne by gasps and concussions of inane hysteria. It was too late to sleep, for they were to take the 2.15 train at Victoria for Southampton, and for several hours the husband and wife sat in excited conversation...
