The local banks chartered by Congress, have, it is cheerfully admitted, extended great benefits to our citizens; but their present situation is such as does not enable them to continue to dispense those benefits in the degree or manner in which they are needed. From their small capitals and impaired credit, their operations have been greatly reduced, and must necessarily continue to be so, unless radically modified. As might be expected, enterprize is paralyzed, industry fails to receive its due reward, and a circulating medium entirely defective produces its invariably deleterious effects. As all the charters of the local banks expire on the 3d of March, 1836, it fortunately is in the power of Congress, by a wise legislation at this session, to relieve the District from these evils.
