MO-O OF THE KAWAINUI: SHORT FICTION (PAPERBACK)

Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.This collection of seven short stories and one long one, Mo-o of the Kawainui, after which the volume is named, represents an experiment in voice, my struggle to express fictively the complexities of my personal background and upbringing. The first, Crabs, represents my original breakthrough in voice. It is through the protagonist, Doc Chang, and his crab Chester that I am able to describe one of the teeming places of my childhood--a place where awe and imagination were alive every morning and every day--and to hear and see into the darkest, most subterranean places of my life. Despite his withdrawal from common humanity, the Chinese doctor and his pet crab have taught me to love Hawaii, the place of my birth, and to accept myself as a human being and to be open to spiritual transformation and renewal. The next six stories, The Jiro Stories, are about Jiro, a third generation Japanese American boy. His mother is a Mormon, and Jiro is being raised a Mormon. His religion places a barrier between himself and his local peers, and his father who has long resisted joining the Mormon church. The boy's struggle is to stand apart from his parents and even from his peers. What The Jiro Stories leaves out is the native Hawaiian background of Jiro's mother. This is remedied in Mo-o of the Kawainui. Given away as an infant to be raised by a native Hawaiian family, Jiro's mother has been taught Hawaiian ways. She knows native herbal remedies and uses them to treat Jiro and his younger siblings. The spiritual world of the native Hawaiians is real to her, and she tries to...
