Excerpt: .should round-out the recitation-by giving such instruction as the class needs. Selecting the unit of knowledge to be taught, the teacher's self-preparation to prevent it, the preparation of the class-mind to receive the lesson, the presentation of the lesson, the direction of pupils study, the test of their preparation to the application of the lesson, --all these are acts requiring abundant knowledge of subject matter, vast industry, great skill and untiring patience. It is no little matter--the training of a school teacher. We sometimes hear the expression a good teacher but a poor disciplinarian. There is no such thing. Order is heaven's first law. We cannot have a good school without good order and discipline. Let us see to it, then, that our order and discipline are right. The order in a school room is good when each student is engaged in real educative work without interfering with his neighbor. Order is not quietness, though good schools are usually quiet. No teacher should try to teach in disorder. Order is a habit and habits are formed by repetition. Train your students to walk quietly, to speak softly, to be gentle. In all the rooms, the same regulations as to seating, water, leaving and entering the room, recitations, etc., should prevail to the end that right habits be formed, and when formed, that they be not changed. Good discipline is righteous self-regulation. Students should learn to govern themselves. From the first grade...
